CONCEPT OF HR FIRM

Human resources consulting is a type of advisory or counseling service that businesses and corporations use to improve the leadership's relationship with employees. One way of looking at this sort of consulting is to describe it as a means of optimizing "human capital". In this context, human capital refers to the economic advantages that employees bring to a company by virtue of the training, experience, and skills that they possess. Most companies seek the services of a human resources consulting firm at some point in order to help them realize the competitive advantages that can be gained by enhancing their human capital and by making their human resource processes more effective. These sorts of services are particularly popular in moments of corporate transition, growth, and merger, when executives want an outside opinion about how internal processes and policies could be made more effective.
